Family History Month and the Records of Our Families
by Curt B. Witcher

Another Family History Month is upon us--and I truly hope it is much more than "just another" Family History Month for you! The Historical Genealogy Department, in cooperation with a number of local organizations and individuals, is offering a full calendar of things one can do to be active in genealogy and family history discovery this coming month.

One can become a more successful searcher of our online catalog, Ancestry.com, and HeritageQuestOnline by attending the computer training sessions; one can learn how scrapbooking can become an exciting way to preserve and present family history information; one can get special, one-on-one assistance in British Isles research; and so much more. If you're interested in taking a refresher course in getting started on your genealogy for the first time, learning how to begin writing your family story, planning a successful research trip, or learning about your family's health history, we've got something for you. A complete list of the October programs will be available next week at the following website: <www.acpl.lib.in.us/genealogy/programs.html>. We'd be pleased to have you join us.

The FriendsOfAllenCounty.org website is becoming increasingly full-featured. Recently two federated search options were added to the site. A federated search allows one to search across multiple databases for the same name. A researcher can engage this feature by clicking on the "Search Site" button.

One will find a "Search Site" button on the main FriendsOfAllenCounty.org webpage. Clicking on that button will bring up a screen that explains the search option and provides one with a box in which to key a name of interest. The search executed by the "Search Site" option is a "fuzzy" or character-string search. Hence, searching for the name "Williams" will give one "Williams" and "Williamson" results.

The "Search Site" button on the main FriendsOfAllenCounty.org webpage will search all the databases on the website. A second "Search Site" button found on the "Fort Wayne and Allen County, Indiana Databases" webpage will search all the Fort Wayne and Allen County databases. This is helpful if one wants to confine one's search results to just Allen County, Indiana data.

Our thoughts remain with those struggling to pull their lives back together after the two ravaging storms that hit our gulf coast states. We all know so many individuals and organizations that are doing their part for the recovery effort. The staff of the Allen County Public Library have donated thousands of dollars directly to affected families and through the Red Cross. Our library has also adopted a small public library in Louisiana completely devastated by the storms. Our goal is to be instrumental in getting them back on their feet and serving the public again. Attendees at the recent Federation of Genealogical Societies conference in Salt Lake City donated hundreds of dollars to America's Second Harvest, Inc. as well as hundreds of pounds of soap, shampoo, and personal hygiene products that were shipped directly to relief sites. Those interested in family history continue to demonstrate in meaningful ways they are also interested in families.

Not to be lost on those of us who are passionate about family and local history is the huge loss of personal, public, and private organizational records caused by these storms. If we are serious about preserving our heritage, discovering who our ancestors are, and sharing the details of their lives, we must be equally serious about seeing that the records in our communities and in our own homes, churches, and offices of organizations with which we are involved are preserved in a manner that will ensure their survival through disasters of all types.

One of the best ways to ensure that information is preserved is to store true copies of the data in several different places, and sometimes even in several different forms. Members of your family should have copies of the family record pages from your family bible as well as back-ups to your computerized genealogy files. Your church, school, and local governmental entities should have their records regularly microfilmed or digitized by reputable companies that provide high quality products in standard formats. And then copies should be placed in libraries and archives. The Historical Genealogy Department welcomes being the preservation archive for copies of your family and local histories. Even your businesses and area associations should take appropriate care to preserve their historical records.

It is up to us to ensure the records that document our heritage survive. Our descendants will expect nothing less from us.

Transforming a German Place Name into a Research Lead
by Don Litzer

If you have the name of a German ancestral place of origin, and especially if you believe that you know the region in Germany from where your ancestors came, several sources may help in verifying that location and furthering your research.

Spotting a place name on a map is important, but only a first step; you need to place it in a context with record sources. For German research, this means identifying the location of the church your ancestors would have attended (important because civil registration was not universal in Germany until 1876) and administrative territories responsible for your ancestors' vital and other civil records.

For years, the standard source for such research was Charles M. Hall's Atlantic Bridge to Germany (929 H14a), published in ten volumes from 1974 to 1997. Each volume of this ground-breaking series provides a historical overview, a gazetteer of place-names linking variously to church and civil jurisdictions and records locations, and maps.

The Atlantic Bridge to Germany series is now being produced by Linda Herrick and Wendy Uncapher of Origins. A new level of polish and thoroughness is evident in their revised editions for Baden (943.46 H434a), Alsace-Lorraine (944.38 H434a), and Pomerania (on order).

The new editions include 1:100,000 scale maps from the Karte des Deutschen Reiches collection representing Germany as it existed prior to World War I, and which include all locations listed in the works' gazetteers. The upgraded historical overviews, rich with maps and diagrams explaining administrative history, territorial changes, and other genealogically significant information, are capped off by useful bibliographies.

If a German village/town/city has its own church, the Atlantic Bridge to Germany refers you to available LDS-microfilmed records. However, if a village's residents belonged to another community's church, Atlantic Bridge to Germany won't indicate that church's location; you're still uncertain whether useful parish records are available.

Kevan Hansen's Map Guide to German Parish Registers, discussed by John Beatty in July's Genealogical Gems, addresses this need. Each volume of Hansen's series, following a brief historical overview, has two sets of outline maps (one each for Lutheran and Catholic churches, Germany's principal confessions, with a narrative covering other religions). Each map, which shows the approximate parish boundaries in an Amt (local civil district), is accompanied by a list of the Amt's parishes including, if its records are filmed, the LDS number for the parish's first microfilm, and a list of the Amt's communities cross-referenced to the parishes by which they're served. At the end of each volume is an alphabetical index to place names.

Map Guide to German Parish Registers (943 H198m) have been published for Hessen (Darmstadt), Baden, Mecklenburg (Schwerin and Strelitz), Schleswig-Holstein and Oldenburg, Wuerttemberg, and Hessen-Nassau.

Options exist for regions not covered by the Hansen series. Brigitte Kreplin's Die Gemeinde und Wohnplatze Pommerns (943.16 K88g) links places to parishes and civil jurisdictions in Pomerania. Parishes of Ostfriesland (943.52 P219) cross-references places to parishes. For Bavaria, Saxony, and Prussia's provinces, pre-World War I gazetteers, collectively referred to as town gazetteers or Gemeindelexikonen, indicate the parish affiliation of small communities. These are available from LDS on microfilm; see Larry O. Jensen, A Genealogical Handbook for German Research, Volume I (943 J53ga), pages 61-70, and Fay Dearden's The German Researcher: How to Get the Most Out of an LDS Family History Center (929 D33ga), page 38. For other regions, an area search, beginning with Meyers Orts- und Verkehrs-Lexikon des Deutschen Reiches (943 W93m) is recommended.

State Records - North Carolina Core Collection
by Roberta Ridley

35mm Microfilm Collection of 4318 reels
Reel Guide: North Carolina Records, Core Collection - call no. 975.6
N181N, v.1

It has been said that "nothing could be finer than to be in Carolina...." and it may be true, but it's even better if you are fortunate enough to have ancestors from North Carolina. If that is the case, we would like to introduce you to the North Carolina Core Collection. This extensive collection of microfilmed county court house records has been preserved and made available by the North Carolina State Archives. The records have a chronological range from 1659 through 1977, but most fall between the mid 1700s and early 1900s.

Researchers drawn to North Carolina for ancestor information can view a cornucopia of data types. Sample record groups featured include the following: apprentice bonds and indentures, bastardy bonds, births, court minutes, deaths, deeds, dowers, flesh marks, land sold for taxes, military records, Negro cohabitation certificates, real estate conveyances, tax records, wills and other types of probate records of estates, such as administrators' accounts, and guardian bonds. One listing for Gates County is "Registration of Slaves to work in Great Dismal Swamp, 1847-1861." Of course, the offerings and time periods covered by each record will vary from one county to another.

Marriages are among the most valuable record groups and include "Colored Marriage Registers 1839-1969" and marriage bonds, which begin as early as the year 1741. A microfiche statewide index for these marriage bonds provides the groom's name, bride's name, date of bond, bondsman and witness names. The records themselves are found within the county groupings in alphabetical order by surname. A marriage bond is a keepsake piece of history that can provide valuable details on ancestors, such as parents of the bride and groom, and names of bondsmen and witnesses, who may also be related. Many of the microfilmed bonds are completely hand written and others are on printed forms; all are copies of the original documents.

These are but a few select items from the amazing North Carolina Core Collection. Visit us to explore that, along with our supplemental series of North Carolina Baptist Church Records and federal Tax Assessment Lists (1864-1866) for the state, and you will be amazed with your North Carolina findings.

PRESERVATION TIP OF THE MONTH

ACPL's Preservation Technician Becky Schipper offers advice on conserving your documents.

A very handy and inexpensive guide for preservation of various types of materials is, "A Preservation Guide: Saving the Past and the Present for the Future," by Barbara Sagraves. It is published by Ancestry (1995). Find it at ACPL at 929 Sa18p.

HOTEL OF THE MONTH

Each issue we will feature a local hotel, for visitors from out-of-town.

Hampton Inn and Suites Ft. Wayne North
5702 Challenger Parkway
Fort Wayne 46818

Hampton Inn is a large chain featuring attractive rates, and most people know what to expect from them. The rooms have hair dryer, coffee maker, iron, complimentary movies and internet access (WiFi in lobby). Hot breakfast and newspaper included each morning. There are 90 rooms, some of which are suites, an indoor pool and exercise room. Well located for the mall and restaurants, some of which will deliver to the Hampton. The library is an easy fifteen minute drive away.
