How can it be the end of the third quarter of 2012 already?! Amazing as it may seem, we have arrived at the doorstep of Family History Month 2012, and there is an incredible selection of activities from which you can choose. Our Family History Month events are especially designed to broaden your research horizons, to deepen your knowledge of genealogical as well as historical research methodology, to provide you with first-rate networking opportunities, and to introduce a bit of family history fun into your life. You will notice some mini-themes throughout the month of programs, including state-specific research topics, using an ancestor’s death event to harvest as much data as possible, and technology topics. Do yourself a big favor and partake of as many offerings as you can.

The first few days of autumn tempt many to begin cleaning-up the yard and the house, preparing for the changes that winter often brings. It also might be a good time to clean-up and organize research notes and documents gathered from a summer of family history sleuthing. If you have pictures and notes from a family reunion, now would be a good time to organize and possibly even annotate them, while the information is still at least relatively fresh in your mind. If you made research trips to various libraries and record repositories, resist the file-by-pile method of organization for your copies and digital images. Organize that data now in a way in which it can be easily retrieved.

It is interesting to note that the archival community increasingly has been heralding October as Archives Month—the same month we have claimed as Family History Month for many years. While not a complete list of Archives Month activities, some useful information can be found at the following website: <www.statearchivists.org/archivesmonth/AAM-directory.htm> Perhaps this is a sign to us that we should be paying more attention to how we archive our family history data so that it is both easily accessible for us today, and for future generations of researchers tomorrow.

Land in Her Own Name: Women as Homesteaders in North Dakota
by Cynthia Theusch

When we think about homesteaders, we normally picture a husband and wife working together to create a frontier home for their family. “But the Homestead Act also allowed women, for the first time, to claim an independent stake in the land...if they were single or heads of households, at least twenty-one years of age, and citizens or immigrants who had filed for citizenship.” In H. Elaine Lindgren’s book, “Land in Her Own Name: Women as Homesteaders in North Dakota” (978.4 L643Lan), we learn that 287 women filed for homesteads under this 1862 law. Dr. Lindgren, who taught sociology at North Dakota State University, spent years researching these women. She interviewed them or their relatives and friends, and also reviewed the documents for each land claim.

A majority of women claimed land near close family members (parents, sisters, brothers, or adult children), other relatives, a husband-to-be, or friends. For example, Lena Norby’s parents had their homestead across the section line from her property. Three of her brothers also had claims nearby.

Lindgren included excerpts from diaries and letters in her study, as well as photos of some of the sod houses, shacks, dugouts, log cabins, and wood-frame homes that were built on the claims. Mary Ann Murray wrote in her diary about constructing her sod house. “Sod was stripped from the prairie with the walking plow, cut into pieces 4” x 12” x 24” and then stacked like bricks to enclose the 12’ x 14’ house. A wood roof and floor was installed and wood-framed interior walls carried wallpaper and an essential shelf or two.” Other excerpts from diaries and letters highlight the daily struggles and good times enjoyed, as well as the challenges of coping with the long winter months, wild animals and snakes.

An appendix, arranged alphabetically by name, provides details on each woman homesteader. Included are: land location, ethnic background of mother and father, age when land transaction was initiated, date transaction initiated, date of final land transaction, birth date, and marital status when transaction was initiated. Even if your ancestors did not homestead in North Dakota, this book offers a personal and revealing glimpse of what homesteading pioneers faced in establishing their new homes on the prairie.

Funeral Records of Juneau, Alaska
by Dawne Slater-Putt, CG(sm)*

“Funeral Records of Juneau, Alaska,” is not only a rich source of information for genealogists interested in someone who died in the Juneau area between 1898 and 1964, but also an excellent example of data that can be found in this type of record. Five 16 millimeter microfilms, available in The Genealogy Center (cabinet 69-O-4), include images of records from three mortuaries: C. W. Young Company, Juneau-Young Company and the Charles W. Carter Mortuary.
Reel 1 is a master index to the set. Reel 2 covers Volumes 1-6, January 1898-August 1930; reel 3 covers Volumes 7-12, August 1930-December 1944; reel 4 covers Volumes 13-17, December 1944-April 1958; and reel 5 covers Volumes 18-19, April 1958-March 1964. Each volume also includes its own index.

Each page of the records includes information about the death, funeral and burial of an individual, with some additional details. The amount of data that has been logged for each person - presumably by a mortuary employee - varies.

One example is the entry for Mrs. Ada Van Wart in Volume 7, page 4, on Reel 3 of the microfilm. She died 2 September 1930 at St. Ann's Hospital of burns and shock. Her funeral was at Trinity Cathedral on 4 September, and Pioneer Auxiliary Lodge, Igloo No. 6, participated. She was buried in Evergreen Cemetery. The record noted the names of her doctor and clergyman. Other information included occupation (housewife), marital status (married) and religion (Ep - presumably Episcopal). Mrs. Van Wart was born in November 1857. Her parents' names and birth places were unknown. The cost of her funeral was $150. Some important information for the genealogist included the names of pall bearers and near relatives. Mrs. Van Wart's bearers were Lockie McKinnon, Elmer Reed, F. Wollard, Dolly Grey or J. Latimer Grey, Lloyd Winter and J. M. Williams. Her husband was Edwin Van Wart, her son was Wm. Ingle and her daughter was Mrs. Nellie Whitehead.

The information in these funeral home records will lead the savvy genealogist to numerous other resources - a cemetery marker, death record, obituary, possibly two marriage records for Mrs. Van Wart, since she had a son with the surname Ingle, a marriage record for her daughter, a newspaper article detailing the event which caused the burns leading to her death, and more.

Technology Tip of the Month--Adobe Photoshop: Reducing a Moire Pattern (Part 2)
by Kay Spears

Last month, I wrote about reducing the Moire pattern in a photograph by using the settings on a scanner. But, what if the scanner you are using doesn't have those settings? Let's look at reducing the Moire pattern by using Adobe Photoshop. As with the previous "fix" I described, the resulting image will be slightly blurred. So, once again, you will probably need to choose between an out of focus image or one with a Moire pattern.

First, open the image. Enlarge the image view to 100 percent. Now, zoom out by holding down the Ctrl key and pressing the - key. Don't confuse screen resolution issues with the Moire pattern and keep zooming out until you can no longer see the Moire pattern. When that pattern disappears, note the zoom percentage displayed in the lower left corner of the screen. Now select Image>Image Size and check Resample Image and Constrain Proportions near the bottom of the dialog box that opens. In the Pixel Dimensions drop down box, change "pixels" to "percent" and enter the percentage you made note of previously. Click OK.
Then, select Image>Image Size to reopen that dialog box. In the Pixel Dimensions drop down box, once again change “pixels” to “percent.” This time enter the original percentage – 100. In the drop down box at the bottom of the Image Size dialog box, select Bicubic Smoother and then click OK. This should reduce the visual effect of the Moire pattern. I had to go through all of these steps twice on my practice image before I noticed an improvement.

Quick-Tip of the Month for Preservation--Importance of Electronic Records
by Curt B. Witcher

The Archivist of the United States, in collaboration with state archivists around the country, has declared October 10, 2012 Electronic Records Day. (This date was picked for the binary expression "1010.") The idea behind this day is to bring additional attention to our country’s digital repositories at all levels. Increasingly, the documents that evidence today’s activities (from births, marriages, and deaths to reunion programs, church minutes, and school records) are at greater and greater risk of being lost. Our children and their children may have precious little with which to research when they decide to seek information about our generation. That should be a grave concern to us.

Many articles and web sites pertinent to personal digital preservation have been referenced previously in this ezine. In case you’re wondering why this topic gets such heavy coverage and significant emphasis, much of the reason rests with how poorly most genealogists preserve their digital assets for future generations to use and enjoy. Many priceless images and sometimes irrecoverable data is lost each day because genealogists fail to take basic measures to properly back-up and share their family history data.

The Library of Congress offers very useful downloadable PDF documents, streamed videos, and step-by-step guides on its website: www.digitalpreservation.gov/personalarchiving/. If you’ve explored the site before, go back for a refresher. If it’s new to you, you will find tips on how best to preserve your digital photographs, digital audio and video, email, personal digital records, and websites.

Protecting our digital assets necessarily means paying attention to local, state, and national archives, and what they are doing to preserve and make accessible those documents that evidence our heritage--those documents that we not only need to do our research, but also that our children’s children need in future generations. All these archives are under budgetary attack, though their respective budgets as a percentage of their governing bodies’ overall budgets are embarrassingly minuscule.

We recently learned of the closing of the Georgia State Archives to walk-in customers, and how that archives will lose all but three staff members. One can read about it in a recent New York Times article. <http://www.nytimes.com/2012/09/27/us/budget-cuts-to-limit-public-access-to-georgia-archives.html?_r=0> When the Georgia governor's recent press conference (called, ironically, to celebrate October as Archives Month!!) was populated by more than one hundred concerned citizens, the governor committed to keeping the Archives open. It’s really hazy, though, what exactly that means. One technically could keep the Archives open by having only three staff and no walk-in customers. And that is exactly what this author predicts will happen when the spotlight dims.

In this author’s home state of Indiana, the State Archives’ budget continues to be cut. With a smaller staff, the Indiana State Archives needs to deal with increasing numbers of records, including electronic records. There is a backlog of more than one decade’s worth of records to be processed. January 2013 will bring a new administration into state government, and all the records of the current governor and his administration will be transferred to the State Archives. Who will process that intake of records and how will the processing be done when staff cannot keep up with current activities? And all of this is happening in a state that actually has a budget surplus. Clearly there is much advocacy to be done.

Let’s celebrate Electronic Records Day by stepping-up our own efforts to preserve our digital data, and also, by doing something proactive to bring increasing attention to the importance of our local, state, and National Archives.

Family History Month Overview
******************************

Family History Month 2012 is here, so celebrate by attending some of the many events planned by The Genealogy Center Staff along with our Allen County Genealogical Society of Indiana and DAR friends. Classes will interest both beginners and more advanced researchers, and will highlight census and cemetery research, electronic databases, and brick wall research. There will be tours of the Center as well as the ever popular Midnight Madness Extended Research Hours on Friday, October 26--when researchers will have the opportunity to do family history research until midnight. For detailed class descriptions, more information, and to register for individual sessions as well as the extended research hours, see the brochure at http://www.GenealogyCenter.org/Libraries/2012_Brochures/FHM.sflb.ashx.

After enjoying Family History Month, the shorter daylight hours and colder temperatures may make one want to stay inside. But The Genealogy Center has plans for you over the winter months. Come out of the cold and attend the annual WinterTech classes held the second Wednesday of each month, from November through February. Beginning at 2:30 p.m., you can attend the classes and remain for the Allen County Genealogical Society of Indiana's monthly meetings at 7 p.m. With the hours in between, you can research in The Genealogy Center and network with other genealogists.

This year's lectures start with "Twitter for #Genealogy." Tina Lyons will tell us how genealogists everywhere share research, collaborate with others, participate in conferences, and cultivate friendships in the world-wide genealogical community. Join us on November 14, 2012 at 2:30 PM in Meeting Room A to learn the basics of using Twitter.

Other WinterTech classes will include "Using OneNote in Your Genealogical Research," on December 12th; "e-Readers & Family History," on January 9th; and "Plug-In Your Armchair Genealogy: Researching from Home," on February 13th. For more information about any of these classes, see the brochure at http://www.genealogycenter.org/Libraries/2012_Brochures/winterTech2012.sflb.ashx. To register for any of these classes, please call 260-421-1225 or email Genealogy@ACPL.Info. Join us in keeping family history efforts thriving through the winter months!

War of 1812 Pension Digitization Update
by Curt Witcher
Did you know that more than 343,000 War of 1812 pension documents have been digitized and are now online for free at: <http://go.fold3.com/1812pensions/>? That is a good first step toward having all 7.2 million online and searchable! Though we do have many miles to go, this weekend we learned of some neat activities.

First, the Florida State Genealogical Society announced a $2000 matching grant program for the "Preserve the Pensions!" fund. If they're successful, $4000 will be raised in total, and then matched by $4000 from Ancestry.com, who is matching every gift. Read all about it at: <http://www.flsgs.org/cpage.php?pt=197>.

Second, $1,400 was raised this week from members of the Fairfax Genealogical Society for the 1812 project. That will be matched by the society's publishing endowment, and then all of those funds will be matched by Ancestry.com. That means an additional 11,200 pages of pension documents will be available.

Finally, I noted that California genealogist, J. Paul Hawthorne posted the following on his Facebook page: "I just donated $25.00. If ALL of my 386 Facebook friends donated $25.00, then 9,650 images could be digitized for all of us to use!" Way to go, Paul--I like the way you think! I believe you're being a bit modest, though. 386 people donating $25 would equal $9,650. With Ancestry matching every dollar raised, your effective "buying power" would be $19,300. Since every image costs just $0.50, $19,300 would make 38,600 images available!
